

Factsheet 68

Tenancy rights – security of tenure

June 2017

About this factsheet

This factsheet provides information on a tenant's right to keep their home (security of tenure). It explains how different tenancies offer different levels of security, meaning some tenants can be evicted more easily than others.

For information about other aspects of tenancy rights, see the Age UK factsheets on rents and home improvements and repairs. We also publish factsheets on finding accommodation in the private rented sector and from social landlords, specialist housing for older people and park homes.

The information in this factsheet is applicable in England and Wales. If you are in Scotland or Northern Ireland, please contact Age Scotland or Age NI for information. Contact details can be found at the back of this factsheet.

Contact details for any organisation mentioned in this factsheet can be found in the Useful Organisations section.

Contents

1	Recent developments	4
2	Introduction	5
3	Who is a tenant?	5
4	Types of tenancy	6
4.1	Fixed term or periodic?	6
4.2	Private tenants	7
4.3	Local authority and housing association tenants	7
5	Your right to keep your home	8
5.1	The eviction process	8
5.2	Defending a claim for possession	11
5.3	Relationship breakdown	12
5.4	Mortgage repossession	12
5.5	Immigration status	13
6	Grounds for possession	14
7	Grounds for possession for private tenants	15
7.1	Regulated (protected and statutory) tenants	15
7.1.1	Mandatory grounds	15
7.1.2	Discretionary grounds	15
7.2	Assured tenants	16
7.2.1	Mandatory grounds	16
7.2.2	Discretionary grounds	16
7.3	Assured shorthold tenants	17
8	Grounds for possession for local authority tenants	19
8.1.1	Mandatory grounds	19
8.1.2	Discretionary grounds	19
9	Grounds for possession for housing association tenants	20
10	Probationary, 'flexible' and demoted tenancies	20
10.1	Probationary tenancies	20

10.2	Flexible tenancies – England only	21
10.3	Demoted tenancy	23
11	Suitable alternative accommodation	23
12	The right to inherit a tenancy ('succession')	24
12.1	Joint tenants	24
12.2	Private tenants	25
12.2.1	Assured (including assured shorthold tenancies)	25
12.2.2	Regulated (protected and statutory) tenancies	25
12.3	Local authority tenants	26
12.3.1	All Welsh tenancies and English tenancies pre-1 April 2012	26
12.3.2	Tenancies in England that began on or after 1 April 2012	26
12.4	Housing association tenants	26
13	Harassment and illegal eviction	27
	Useful organisations	28
	Age UK	31
	Support our work	31

1 Recent developments

The Housing and Planning Act 2016 became law in May 2016. It changes the law in England in a number of areas, including:

- Rogue landlords and poor housing – local authorities can apply to have rogue landlords and letting agents banned from carrying out lettings and property management work. These are landlords and agents who have been convicted of a 'banning order offence'. It has not yet been decided which offences are banning order offences, but the Government's proposals include being convicted of illegally evicting or harassing a tenant. If a tenant has been illegally evicted or harassed, they can apply for a rent rebate, known as a Rent Repayment Order.
- 'Lifetime' secure tenancies – in most cases, local authorities cannot grant lifetime secure tenancies that run indefinitely unless terminated by the tenant or the court. Instead, they have to grant fixed-term tenancies. The length varies depending on the household's circumstances. A review takes place towards the end of the fixed term to decide whether a further fixed-term tenancy is offered or the tenant is asked to leave.
- Statutory succession rules for secure tenancies – the same statutory succession rules apply to all secure tenancies regardless of when they were granted. Only the tenant's spouse, civil partner or live-in partner is eligible to inherit the tenancy via statutory succession. The tenancy agreement can give other family members succession rights, but they only get a five-year fixed-term tenancy.

Currently, only the changes relating to Rent Repayment Orders have come into force. These are covered in factsheet 35, Tenancy rights – rents. The other changes are not yet in force and much detail is still unknown, for example the circumstances in which local authorities can continue to grant lifetime tenancies. They may come into force in Autumn 2017.

In Wales, there is different legislation. Once the Renting Homes (Wales) Act 2016 is implemented, a new tenancy regime will come into force. Apart from a few exceptions, all current tenancies will be replaced by two types of occupation contract (a secure contract, based on current secure tenancies issued by local authorities and a standard contract, based on current assured shorthold tenancies used in the private rented sector).

The Act works retrospectively, so it is not only future agreements that are affected - existing tenancy agreements will also be converted.

The Welsh Government has not announced when this part of the Act will be implemented and current rules on different tenancy types still apply. Contact Age Cymru Advice or Shelter Cymru for the latest information, or see the Welsh Government website: www.gov.wales/topics/housing-and-regeneration/legislation.

2 Introduction

As a tenant, you have certain legal rights, including the right to keep your home ('security of tenure'). In practice, this usually means your landlord is unable to evict you without obtaining a court order. In some cases, the court must be satisfied a landlord has a good reason to evict you; in other cases, the landlord does not need to give a reason.

This means some tenants enjoy greater security of tenure than others and your level of security depends on what kind of tenancy you have. It is therefore important to understand the type of tenancy you have and the level of security you enjoy.

If your landlord asks you to leave or you get a letter or notice telling you to leave, you should seek advice immediately.

Most people living in rented accommodation are tenants and have a tenancy of a type established in an Act of Parliament. This factsheet gives basic information about the types of tenancy established by these Acts and the rights they give tenants. It briefly discusses renters who are not tenants and tenants who fall outside of statutory protection.

Seek specialist advice if you are not sure if you are a tenant or what type of tenancy you have. You can use the 'tenancy checker' tool on the Shelter website or the Shelter Cymru website in Wales.

3 Who is a tenant?

Most people living in rented accommodation are tenants, but some may be licensees. A good start point is your tenancy agreement, which may say you have a tenancy granted under the Rent Act 1977, the Housing Act 1985, or the Housing Act 1988. If it does, you are a tenant.

The distinction between a tenancy and a licence can be unclear, but, in brief, a tenant has 'exclusive possession' of their home, whereas a licensee is given permission to occupy.

Exclusive possession does not mean you have to be the only person living in a property. You can be a joint tenant, have family members living with you, or have exclusive possession of just one room and share a kitchen and bathroom with other people.

Being in exclusive possession means you are in control of the premises and can exclude the whole world, including the landlord.

You are not usually a tenant if your landlord or someone working for your landlord comes into your home, or your room, to provide you with services. These can include care services or carrying out cleaning, changing linen, etc.

People in care homes are usually licensees. Most people living in sheltered housing are tenants. Tenants usually have more rights than licensees. In the past, some landlords offered 'sham licences' - tenancies in all but name. Sham licences are now less common, as private landlords can grant low-security assured shorthold tenancies.

It is important to be aware you may have a tenancy even if your agreement says you are a licensee. A landlord cannot opt out of rights you should have as a tenant, regardless of what your agreement says.

4 Types of tenancy

4.1 Fixed term or periodic?

All tenancies can either be fixed term or periodic.

Fixed-term tenancies are granted for a specific length of time. They are very common in the private rented sector, where you are likely to be given a tenancy with a fixed term of six or 12 months.

They are less common in the social housing sector, although local authorities and housing associations can grant them and have been encouraged to do so. You may be able to challenge an offer of a fixed-term tenancy by a local authority or housing association, or the length of the tenancy offered (see section 10).

Periodic tenancies do not have fixed terms, but instead roll on until you or your landlord decide you want the tenancy to end.

Some tenancy agreements specify the 'period' of a tenancy, stating that it runs from week to week or month to month or that it is a monthly or weekly tenancy. If not, the period is inferred from how the rent is set. Periodic tenancies are sometimes called 'lifetime' tenancies.

In future, local authorities will only be able to grant lifetime tenancies in limited circumstances. This change was brought in by the Housing and Planning Act 2016, but has not yet been implemented. Full details of the circumstances in which authorities will continue to grant lifetime tenancies have not yet been published.

The distinction between fixed-term and periodic tenancies is important because it affects your rights as a tenant. It is particularly important if you are an assured shorthold tenant.

If you have a fixed-term assured shorthold tenancy and remain in the property at the end of the fixed term without a new tenancy being granted, your tenancy continues as a 'statutory periodic' tenancy. From this point on, your landlord can use the 'no fault' procedure to evict you, although you cannot be forced to leave the property until six months have passed since the beginning of the tenancy (see section 7.3).

If the tenancy was always periodic, you can be evicted on a no fault basis after six months.

4.2 Private tenants

As a private tenant, you are likely to have one of three tenancies:

- a regulated (protected or statutory) tenancy – if you have lived in your home or with the same landlord since before 15 January 1989
- an assured tenancy – if you moved into your home on or after 15 January 1989 and were not with the same landlord at a previous address
- an assured shorthold tenancy – if you either:
 - moved into your home between 15 January 1989 and 28 February 1997 and were given specific notice saying the tenancy was assured shorthold (unless you had the same landlord at a previous address, in which case the new tenancy may be regulated or assured), or
 - moved in on or after 28 February 1997 (unless you had a regulated or assured tenancy with the same landlord at a previous address or the agreement specifically states otherwise).

Regulated tenancies are governed by the Rent Act 1977. Assured and assured shorthold tenancies are governed by the Housing Act 1988 and the Housing Act 1996. The latter removed a requirement for a specific notice to be given if a tenancy is assured shorthold. This means assured shorthold tenancies are now the default private sector tenancy.

Note

Some special types of tenancy offer less security. For example, if you share accommodation with your landlord or your rent includes payment for board or personal services such as cleaning, you may have less protection. See section 5 for further information.

4.3 Local authority and housing association tenants

If you live in social housing, you are likely to have one of the following:

- a secure tenancy (governed by the Housing Act 1985) – most housing association tenants who moved in before 15 January 1989 and local authority tenants
- an assured tenancy – most housing association tenants who moved in after 15 January 1989
- an assured shorthold tenancy – some housing associations offer this type of tenancy. Your agreement will say if your tenancy is assured shorthold.

If a local authority transfers its stock to a housing association, all existing tenants become assured tenants of the housing association. You may keep extra rights, for example the right to buy.

5 Your right to keep your home

As a tenant, you can usually only be evicted by your landlord if they obtain a possession order from the court.

For most tenancies, there must be a court hearing to decide whether an order should be granted. There is a fast-track procedure that can be used for assured shorthold tenancies after six months or after a longer fixed term has elapsed, meaning there may not be a court hearing. The court still has to consider the case and look at all relevant papers.

Some special types of tenancy or living arrangements offer less protection. Some licensees cannot be evicted without a court order, but others can, including licensees of hostel accommodation provided by local authorities and housing associations. Other tenants or licensees who can be lawfully evicted without their landlord obtaining a possession order include people living with their landlord or their landlord's family and people living rent free.

In such cases, the tenancy or licence can be ended by giving the amount of notice specified in the agreement (or 'reasonable notice' if the agreement is silent on the issue). After the notice period expires, the locks may be changed.

Tied accommodation

The position of occupants of tied accommodation, provided by an employer, is complicated. If you live in tied accommodation, your security of tenure depends on whether you are classed as a 'service occupier' or a 'service tenant'.

As a service tenant, your rights depend on the type of tenancy you have. The landlord generally has to satisfy the court that eviction is reasonable and another worker needs the premises. It is not uncommon for service tenancies to be rent free, in which case the landlord can to evict you without obtaining a court order. Seek specialist advice from Shelter if you live in tied accommodation.

5.1 The eviction process

The eviction process has three main stages:

- 1 the landlord serves a notice indicating they want the property back
- 2 the court grants an 'order for possession'
- 3 the court issues a warrant authorising bailiffs to evict you.

These do not apply in all cases. As stated above, for some tenancies and licences a possession order does not have to be obtained before the locks can be changed.

The court can waive the requirement to serve a notice in exceptional cases, for example if you have been convicted of a serious offence or anti-social behaviour has been proven in another court.

Many tenants leave at the end of the notice period or by the date specified on the order for possession, meaning further enforcement action is not necessary.

Stage one – eviction notice

Unless the exceptional circumstances set out above apply, it is likely you will receive a 'notice to quit', a 'notice seeking possession' or a 'notice requiring possession' as the first stage in the eviction process. The type of notice depends on your tenancy and the reason why the landlord is seeking possession.

Generally speaking, a notice must include your name and address, and give you a period of time before the landlord will apply to court for a possession order. In some cases, your landlord's name and address and full details of any ground for possession (the reason why possession is being sought – see section 6) must be given.

Different grounds require different notice periods. For some, a landlord should give two months' notice, for others, two weeks or less. For assured shorthold tenancies, no ground is required if the landlord is seeking possession after six months or at the end of a longer fixed term, but at least two months' notice must be given.

Stage two - order for possession

When the notice period ends, the landlord can apply to the court for a possession order. If your landlord takes action in the courts, you may end up having to pay some, or all, of their legal costs.

If a possession order is granted outright, you are told to leave the property by a certain date. You can ask the court to delay this date if it causes you 'exceptional hardship' to leave so promptly.

In some cases, the court may grant a possession order that is 'suspended' or 'postponed', meaning a bailiff's warrant will not be granted if you comply with certain conditions (see section 6 for more information).

Stage three – bailiff's warrant

If you do not leave by the date on the possession order or comply with conditions set by the court, your landlord can apply to the court for a warrant authorising a bailiff to evict you.

The court should send you notice that a warrant has been issued, which gives a date and time for the eviction.

The eviction process and homelessness

If you are at risk of homelessness, seek help from your local authority. By law, they must ensure information and advice about homelessness, including how to prevent homelessness, is available to you for free.

Local authorities are responsible for re-housing homeless people who meet certain criteria. To get this help, you must make a homelessness application. They cannot refuse to consider your application because you have not been through all the stages of the eviction process.

By law, they must consider your application if they have 'reason to believe' you may be homeless or threatened with homelessness. This is a very low threshold. Seek advice if the authority turn you away.

If the authority accept that you are threatened with homelessness, which means likely to become homeless within the next 28 days (56 days in Wales), they may have a duty to help you.

This depends on whether you meet other criteria, such as being eligible for help because of your immigration status. The authority could help by negotiating with your landlord or by taking targeted action to address the cause of your threatened homelessness, such as helping you to clear rent arrears.

You are entitled to more help if the authority treats you as being homeless rather than threatened with homelessness. You can be treated as being homeless even if you have not been through all the stages of the eviction process.

By law, you should be treated as being homeless if you have accommodation but it is not reasonable for you to stay there.

Government guidance says this can include an assured shorthold tenant who receives a notice from their landlord saying they want the property back. However, the authority must be satisfied that the landlord will proceed with the eviction and there is no defence to it.

Seek advice if your local authority refuses to accept you are homeless or threatened with homelessness. Do not give up your accommodation without speaking to them. They may say you have made yourself 'intentionally homeless', which is one reason they can give for turning down your application.

For more information on homelessness applications, local authority duties and presenting your case, see factsheet 89, Homelessness.

5.2 Defending a claim for possession

If you receive a notice from your landlord stating they want the property back, seek advice immediately. Bring a copy of the notice to your appointment with the adviser so they can check when your notice period runs out, why your landlord is seeking possession and whether the notice is valid.

A notice may be invalid if the landlord uses the wrong form (for some tenancies, notice must be given using a specific form) or if the form is not properly completed, does not give enough information about why possession is sought, or gives an incorrect date by which you should leave the property.

If your notice is invalid, the court may refuse to grant a possession order. This is unlikely to prevent eviction altogether, as the landlord can simply serve a valid notice to begin the process again, but could buy you time to consider your options.

It may be possible to raise a defence against eviction by disputing the landlord's reason for evicting you (their 'ground for possession') or by claiming they are behaving unlawfully or unreasonably.

If successful, you may be able to keep your home. Your ability to raise a successful defence depends on factors such as your tenancy type, the reason your landlord is seeking possession, whether they are classed as a 'public body' (meaning they must comply with public and human rights law) and whether you have a 'protected characteristic' under the Equality Act 2010. See section 6 for more about grounds for possession.

'No fault' evictions

For assured shorthold tenancies, no ground for possession needs to be given after a certain point. This is often called a 'no fault' eviction and can be difficult to challenge as, usually, the landlord simply has to follow the correct procedure for possession to be granted.

The law was recently changed to try and prevent landlords from carrying out 'retaliatory evictions', which means using the no fault procedure to evict a tenant who has complained about the condition of their property. See factsheet 67, Home improvements and repairs, for more information. There are other restrictions on the use of the no fault procedure, see section 7.3.

If it appears your notice may be invalid or there are other 'defences' you can raise against eviction, an adviser may refer you for specialist legal help. Legal aid, or funding for legal advice and representation, is available for eviction cases, but you must meet eligibility criteria to qualify, such as being on a low income or in receipt of certain benefits. Contact your local Law Centre or Citizens Advice for more information.

5.3 Relationship breakdown

If you are asked to leave your home by your spouse, civil partner or partner (referred to collectively as 'partner'), you may have rights to stay temporarily or permanently. This may be the case even if the tenancy agreement is in their sole name.

If you and your partner separate and find it difficult to agree on who should keep your home, you can try mediation. This can help avoid court proceedings, but is unlikely to be appropriate if you have experienced violence or are at risk of violence.

Legal aid, or funding for legal advice and representation, is available for mediation, but you must meet eligibility criteria, such as being on a low income or in receipt of certain benefits.

If you try mediation, make sure you understand your rights to keep your home and your potential options first. For more information, see factsheet 89, Homelessness.

It is important to be aware a joint 'periodic' tenancy can be ended by one tenant serving a valid notice on the landlord. This means a tenancy that is not a fixed-term tenancy or where the original fixed term has elapsed.

Your partner does not have to obtain your consent to end the tenancy in this way and you may be unable to remain in the property. The situation may be different if you have a 'regulated' (protected) tenancy, seek advice if you are in this position.

If your partner leaves your property but has not served a notice to quit, you need to establish whether you can be made a sole tenant. It may be possible through a deed of assignment (this means your partner transfers their 'share' of the tenancy to you), or by the creation of a new sole tenancy in your name.

Some social landlords (local authorities and housing associations) may be unwilling to do this, particularly if you are under-occupying the property. However, a social landlord is likely to be classed as a 'public body', meaning it must comply with public and human rights law, which gives you more scope to challenge eviction.

5.4 Mortgage repossession

The property you rent may be mortgaged or your landlord may have secured other debts against its value. This gives the person who granted the mortgage or the loan, the lender, a right of possession if your landlord breaches the terms of their agreement, for example by failing to keep up with payments.

If your tenancy was granted before your landlord took out a mortgage and the lender obtains possession of the property, the tenancy is 'binding' on the lender. This means you become the lender's tenant and pay rent to them. They cannot evict you unless they can prove a ground for possession or the no fault procedure is available to them.

Your tenancy binds the lender if it was granted after the mortgage was taken out and with their consent, although there are specific grounds for possession that may apply in these circumstances. If your tenancy was granted without the lender's consent, it will not be binding on them and you can be evicted if they obtain possession.

You can ask the court to allow you to remain in the property for a number of months. You should be sent notices by the lender in advance of the possession hearing and before an application for a bailiff's warrant is made. This gives you an opportunity to ask the court to postpone the eviction.

5.5 Immigration status

The Immigration Act 2014 introduced the concept of a 'right to rent', linked to your immigration status. Some people have an unlimited right to rent, such as British citizens, European Economic Area (EEA) nationals, and people with indefinite leave to remain. Others have a time-limited right to rent and some are disqualified from renting altogether.

You are disqualified from renting if you are not a British, EEA or Swiss citizen and:

- you require leave to enter or remain in the UK but do not have it, or
- you have leave to enter or remain in the UK subject to a condition that you are disqualified from renting.

Private landlords in England must carry out pre-tenancy checks on all prospective adult occupiers of a property to ensure they are not disqualified from renting. They must carry out follow-up checks if an occupier has a time-limited right to rent. For more information, see factsheet 63, Finding private rented accommodation.

If you or a member of your household is disqualified from renting, your security of tenure is affected. If you are an assured (including assured shorthold) or regulated tenant, there is a ground for possession allowing your landlord to start the eviction process if informed that you, or an adult living with you, is disqualified.

This is a 'mandatory' ground for assured tenants and a 'discretionary' ground for regulated tenants.

If your landlord is told all members of your household are disqualified from renting, they do not have to get a court order for possession to evict you. They must serve a notice terminating your tenancy. This notice is enforceable as if it were a court order, meaning that once it expires, the landlord can go to court and ask them to issue a bailiff's warrant.

6 Grounds for possession

In most cases, a landlord must have a specific reason for wanting to evict you and the court must be satisfied such a reason exists if they are to grant a possession order. These reasons are set out in law and vary according to tenancy type. They are known as 'grounds for possession'.

Some grounds are mandatory, so the court must grant a possession order if satisfied the ground applies, subject to any public law, human rights or equality defences raised.

If you have a disability and possession is sought because you have done, or not done, something that might relate to being disabled, the possession proceedings may be considered discriminatory under the Equality Act 2010. For example, you may have been prevented from claiming housing benefit on time because of a mental health problem.

Other grounds are discretionary. The court may grant a possession order, but only if they think it is reasonable to do so. Sometimes, the court will only grant an order if they are satisfied suitable alternative accommodation is available (see section 11).

In deciding whether it is reasonable to grant an order, the court considers factors such as the seriousness of what has happened, the reasons why it happened and the likely consequences of eviction for you and your family.

If you have lived in your property for a significant period of time, the court may decide that eviction would be unreasonable even if your landlord can prove a ground.

When considering a claim for possession on a discretionary ground, the court has the power to 'adjourn' (delay) the proceedings to give you time to clear rent arrears or rectify another breach of tenancy.

Alternatively, they can grant an order but 'suspend' or 'postpone' it on certain conditions. If you fail to meet these conditions, the landlord can go back to court and ask them to proceed with the eviction, although you may be able to ask the court to vary the terms of the order instead.

Note

It is possible to challenge eviction at any stage of the process, including after a bailiff's warrant has been issued. In some cases, it is even possible to regain occupation of a property after you have been evicted. You should always seek specialist advice to see what can be done, although the earlier you do this the better.

For some tenancies, such as assured shorthold tenancies, your options are very limited and may not be worth pursuing.

7 Grounds for possession for private tenants

7.1 Regulated (protected and statutory) tenants

Regulated tenancies, which are no longer granted, offer very strong tenancy rights. They can be either 'protected' or 'statutory', but all regulated tenancies started off as protected tenancies.

A fixed-term protected tenancy comes to an end when the fixed term expires and a periodic protected tenancy can be brought to an end by the landlord serving a notice to quit.

If you remain in occupation after your protected tenancy comes to an end, a statutory tenancy comes into being. Statutory tenants can only be evicted if the landlord can prove a ground to the court.

7.1.1 Mandatory grounds

The main mandatory grounds include:

- the landlord previously lived in the property and wants to live there again
- the landlord let out their own home and wants to live there now
- the property was intended for a member of the clergy, or was previously occupied by a farm manager, widow or widower, and has been temporarily let out to an ordinary tenant
- the landlord is a member of the armed forces and intends to live in the property after discharge.

Normally, these grounds can only be used if the landlord notified you in writing before your tenancy started that you may be evicted for such a reason (although the court can make an exception).

7.1.2 Discretionary grounds

Discretionary grounds for possession include:

- not paying your rent
- damaging or neglecting the property or furniture
- causing a nuisance or annoyance
- renting the property to someone else without the landlord's permission
- the landlord needs the property for themselves or for certain family members
- you are a former employee of the landlord and the property is needed for a new employee
- there is suitable alternative accommodation available (see section 11).

In these cases, the court must be satisfied it is reasonable to make a possession order.

7.2 Assured tenants

Assured tenants have strong tenancy rights and can only be evicted if the landlord can prove a ground to the court.

If the tenancy is within a fixed term, the landlord can only use some of the grounds to gain possession and in most cases only if there is a clause in the tenancy agreement allowing it to be ended in this way.

For example, the discretionary ground where the landlord can show that suitable alternative accommodation is available to you cannot be relied upon.

7.2.1 Mandatory grounds

The main mandatory grounds include:

- the landlord previously lived in the property or intends to do so and made you aware of this before your tenancy started (although the court can make an exception)
- the mortgage lender is repossessing the property – this ground can only be used in certain circumstances, seek advice if you are in this position
- the landlord intends to demolish or carry out substantial work to the property
- significant rent arrears - at least eight weeks' arrears if paying weekly or fortnightly, at least two months' arrears if paying monthly, or three months' arrears if paying quarterly or annually
- conviction for a serious offence or anti-social behaviour that has been proven in another court – see factsheet 9, Anti-social behaviour in housing, for more information.

7.2.2 Discretionary grounds

Discretionary grounds for possession include:

- the landlord can show that suitable, alternative accommodation is available to you
- some rent arrears (at the time of serving the notice and at the start of court proceedings)
- persistent delays in rent payment
- breaking a condition of your tenancy agreement
- damaging or neglecting the property or furniture
- causing a nuisance or annoyance to neighbours or other people living in or visiting the area
- false information given by you prior to the grant of your tenancy.

In these cases, the court must be satisfied that it is reasonable to make a possession order.

7.3 Assured shorthold tenants

An assured shorthold tenancy is a type of assured tenancy and has limited security. During the first six months (or the length of the fixed term if longer), you can only be evicted if your landlord proves one of the grounds for possession set out under section 7.2 above.

After the first six months (or the end of the fixed term if longer), you can be evicted on a 'no fault' basis. This means the landlord does not have to prove a ground in court, although they must follow the correct procedure.

No fault eviction may be called a 'section 21' eviction. This is because the landlord must serve a 'section 21' notice to start the process. To be valid, a section 21 notice must be in writing and give you at least two months' notice that the landlord wants the property back. If your tenancy was granted on or after 1 October 2015, the landlord must use a specific legal form for the notice (or a form substantially to the same effect).

If you have a fixed-term assured shorthold tenancy with a housing association or another social landlord, they should give you notice at least six months before the end of the fixed term if they plan not to renew the tenancy. This applies if your tenancy was granted on or after 1 April 2012 for a fixed term of at least two years.

The notice must be in writing, must state that the landlord plans not to renew your tenancy and must tell you where to get help and advice. If the landlord does not serve this notice, the court cannot make a no fault order for possession at the end of the fixed term. The landlord must also serve a section 21 notice as explained above.

Restrictions on no fault eviction – deposit protection

A landlord cannot serve a valid section 21 notice if they have not complied with their deposit protection obligations. The law says landlords granting assured shorthold tenancies must protect your deposit in an 'authorised scheme'.

The rules are different depending on when your deposit was paid. If it was paid on or after 1 April 2012, your landlord should have protected it within 30 days of receipt and should have provided you with 'prescribed information', including details of where it is protected.

If they did not protect the deposit within 30 days of receipt, or they fail to give you information about where it was protected within 30 days, they cannot use the no fault procedure until they return the money to you (subject to agreed deductions), or until the matter has been decided in court or settled out of court.

The situation is different for deposits paid before 1 April 2012. Seek specialist advice from Shelter if your landlord tries to evict you using the no fault procedure and you believe they have not complied with their deposit protection obligations.

Further restrictions for new tenancies

In England, the Deregulation Act 2015 introduced further restrictions on a landlord's ability to use the no fault procedure. These apply if your tenancy was granted on or after 1 October 2015.

Your landlord cannot use the no fault procedure if they have not provided you with a copy of your property's current Energy Performance Certificate and current gas safety certificate. This applies whether you rent from a private landlord or housing association.

If you rent privately, the landlord must also provide you with an up-to-date copy of the government's 'checklist for renting' guide at some point during the tenancy. They cannot serve a valid section 21 notice if you have complained about the property's condition and been backed up by the local authority serving a notice. See factsheet 67, Home improvements and repairs, for more information.

Your landlord must not serve a section 21 notice within the first four months of your tenancy. If your tenancy has been renewed, the four-month period begins on the first day of the original tenancy. If you have been served with a section 21, your landlord must commence court proceedings within a specific time limit (usually six months). If they do not, they must serve a fresh notice to start the process again.

The Deregulation Act 2015 does not apply in Wales. The Renting Homes (Wales) Act 2016 contains measures to tackle retaliatory evictions, but these have not yet been implemented. Contact Age Cymru Advice or Shelter Cymru for more information, or see the Welsh Government website: www.gov.wales/topics/housing-and-regeneration/legislation

Challenging no fault eviction

The rules set out above mean that a no fault eviction can be challenged even though the landlord does not have to prove a ground in court.

Seek advice if you are in this position. However, you should be clear about what you hope to achieve by challenging eviction in this way. You may only succeed in delaying eviction. This can give you time to explore other housing options, but some options, such as making a homelessness application, may be more difficult to pursue if you are not at immediate risk of losing your home.

See Age UK information guide 8, Housing options, for more information about your housing options and factsheet 89, Homelessness, for information about the homelessness application and assessment process.

8 Grounds for possession for local authority tenants

Most local authority tenants are secure tenants and can only be evicted on limited grounds. There are exceptions, for example tenants with introductory or demoted tenancies and homeless households living in temporary accommodation.

8.1.1 Mandatory grounds

These include:

- your home is illegally overcrowded
- your landlord needs the property empty in order to carry out work to it or to demolish it.

If the landlord seeks possession on these grounds, they must prove suitable alternative accommodation is available for you.

There is an 'absolute' ground for anti-social behaviour, which is identical to the ground against assured tenants in section 7.2.1. The court does not have to be satisfied suitable alternative accommodation is available when making an order on this ground.

8.1.2 Discretionary grounds

These include:

- not paying your rent or breaking a condition of your tenancy agreement
- damaging or neglecting property or furniture provided by your landlord
- causing a nuisance or annoyance to neighbours or other people living in or visiting the area
- you or your partner have left the property because of domestic violence, including threats of violence, and are not going to return
- you obtained your tenancy by giving false information to the landlord.

In these cases, the landlord has to prove one of the grounds applies and the court must be satisfied it is reasonable to make a possession order.

There are discretionary grounds where the landlord must also show they can provide you with suitable alternative accommodation. These include:

- your home is specifically designed or adapted for someone with a physical disability or other special needs and no one with those needs lives with you
- you took over the tenancy after a previous tenant died and the home is larger than you need, except if you were the spouse or civil partner of the previous tenant; it is unclear if this applies if you were live-in partners.

The court must be satisfied it is reasonable to make a possession order.

9 Grounds for possession for housing association tenants

If you are a housing association tenant and your tenancy began before 15 January 1989, the grounds for possession are the same as for secure local authority tenants.

If your tenancy began on or after 15 January 1989, the grounds for possession are the same as for assured private tenants, with an additional discretionary ground available in domestic violence cases. The housing association can seek possession if you or your partner have left the property because of domestic violence, including threats of violence, and are not going to return.

Some housing association tenants have less protection, for example if you have a starter or demoted tenancy.

10 Probationary, 'flexible' and demoted tenancies

10.1 Probationary tenancies

Introductory and starter tenancies are probationary tenancies, which generally last for 12 months. Introductory tenancies are granted by local authorities and starter tenancies by housing associations.

Local authorities can operate introductory tenancy schemes under the Housing Act 1996. If they do this, they must grant introductory tenancies to all new tenants, except those who are already secure or assured tenants. This might apply, for example, where a secure tenant is allocated sheltered accommodation by their local authority. Their new tenancy is secure or assured, not introductory.

An introductory tenant has limited security of tenure. If the local authority wants to evict you, it must serve a notice giving its reasons and allow you 14 days to request an internal review of the decision. If no review is requested or the decision remains the same, the local authority may apply to the court for a possession order.

Provided the local authority has served the correct notice and carried out the review in accordance with the law, you have no defence to the possession claim, other than on public law, equalities or human rights grounds.

If the authority does not start possession proceedings within a 12-month period and other conditions are met, the tenancy automatically becomes secure.

If the authority offers flexible tenancies (secure tenancies granted for fixed terms), the tenancy may become flexible after the introductory period, but only if a notice was served in advance of the tenancy being granted informing you this would happen.

Local authorities can extend introductory tenancies by up to six months to tackle anti-social behaviour. A notice of extension must give the landlord's reasons for extending.

You have the right to ask for a review of a decision to extend your introductory tenancy. You must request this within 14 days of the notice of extension being served.

If a housing association decides to operate a starter tenancy scheme, it must grant starter tenancies to all new tenants, or all new tenants in a designated area. These should be for a maximum of 12 months, or a maximum of 18 months if reasons for extending the probationary period are given and you have been given the opportunity to request a review.

If no action is taken, you are offered another tenancy at the end of the trial period. Housing associations are being encouraged to use tenancies with fixed terms, like a local authority flexible tenancy. These should be granted for a minimum of five years or, exceptionally, for a minimum of two years.

Housing associations can grant 'lifetime' rather than fixed-term tenancies to certain groups of people, such as older people. They should have a policy on when longer-term tenancies are granted and take the needs of vulnerable households and households with children into account. They should give you the opportunity to appeal against or complain about the type or length of tenancy offered.

10.2 Flexible tenancies – England only

A flexible tenancy is a form of secure tenancy granted mainly by local authority landlords. It is granted for a fixed term, normally a minimum of five years. In 'exceptional circumstances', a flexible tenancy can be granted for a minimum term of two years.

Flexible tenancies have more limited security of tenure than 'periodic' or 'lifetime' secure tenancies, which roll on indefinitely unless terminated by you or a court. As a flexible tenant, you can be evicted at the end of the fixed term if the landlord follows the correct procedure, subject to any public law, human rights or equality defences raised.

The landlord must give you the opportunity to request a review of the decision not to renew the tenancy and their decision on review must not be wrong in law. See section 5.2 for more information on defending an eviction claim.

When a flexible tenancy is coming to the end of its fixed term, the local authority must either grant another flexible tenancy, or a periodic secure tenancy, or seek possession. If they do not do any of these, the tenancy automatically becomes a periodic secure tenancy at the end of the fixed term.

Note

Before a local authority can grant flexible tenancies, they must publish a tenancy strategy. It must set out when flexible tenancies will be granted, how long the terms will be and the circumstances in which the authority will grant a further tenancy on the coming to an end of the existing tenancy.

Authorities must have a policy on how to take the needs of households who are vulnerable by reason of age, disability or illness, and the needs of households with children into account. This includes offering tenancies providing 'a reasonable degree of stability'.

You can request a review if you think the authority has not followed its policies by offering you a flexible tenancy of a certain length. You must do so within 21 days of receiving the offer, unless they agree to an extension. You can make a complaint about being offered a flexible instead of a periodic secure tenancy.

If the authority does not want to grant another tenancy when a flexible tenancy comes to an end it must serve two types of notice:

- the first notice must be served at least six months before the tenancy is due to end, with reasons for the non-renewal
- the second notice must be served at least two months before the tenancy is due to end, saying that the authority is seeking possession.

If you receive notice that the local authority does not intend to renew your flexible tenancy, seek advice immediately. You have 21 days from the date the first notice is served to request a review.

The law says a review must, in particular, consider whether the decision has been made in line with the authority's tenancy strategy. The authority must notify you, in writing, of its decision on the review.

Before a fixed-term flexible tenancy ends, the grounds for possession are the same as for periodic secure tenancies (see section 8). There must be a clause in the tenancy agreement allowing the landlord to 're-enter' the property in this way. Flexible tenants have other rights that periodic secure tenants have, such as succession rights (see section 12).

English local authorities have been able to grant flexible tenancies since the Localism Act 2011 came into force on 1 April 2012. The Welsh Government does not intend to introduce this tenancy type in Wales.

10.3 Demoted tenancy

Local authorities and housing associations can apply to have a tenancy 'demoted' by the court. This reduces your security of tenure for a period of time, making it easier for the landlord to evict you.

The court makes a demotion order if satisfied you or someone living with you or visiting you has engaged or threatened to engage in anti-social behaviour, or used or threatened to use the property for unlawful purposes. The court must consider it reasonable to make the order.

If the landlord does not apply for possession within the period of time specified in the demotion order, usually 12 months, your tenancy becomes secure or assured again.

If you receive notice that your landlord is applying to have your tenancy demoted, seek advice immediately.

See factsheet 9, Anti-social behaviour in housing for information about how being accused of anti-social behaviour can affect security of tenure.

11 Suitable alternative accommodation

In some cases, the court may only grant a possession order if satisfied you are to be provided with suitable alternative accommodation.

The alternative accommodation must be suitable for your specific needs. This does not mean the property has to be identical to or even of the same standard as your current accommodation. It is likely the court will consider some needs to be more important than others.

The size of the property and your access needs are particularly important, but the court should consider things like the location of your workplace, your children's schools and your support networks. Issues like the absence of a garden, while relevant, may not make an offer of accommodation unsuitable.

Seek advice if you are in this situation, particularly if the court must also be satisfied that it would be reasonable to move you. This is the case if you inherit a secure tenancy via 'succession' as a family member of the tenant (i.e. not a spouse or civil partner) and the property is deemed too large for you.

12 The right to inherit a tenancy ('succession')

Your right to inherit a family member's tenancy after their death depends on various factors, including the type of tenancy, when it was granted, your relationship to them and how long you lived together.

These sections set out the different statutory succession rules for each tenancy type. This means the circumstances in which the law says a tenancy can be inherited.

Unless there is more than one potential successor, statutory succession happens automatically and does not have to be granted by the landlord. However, the rules on succession are complex and it can be difficult to get a landlord to recognise your right to succeed. Seek advice if you are in this position.

If there is more than one eligible successor, try and decide amongst yourselves who should succeed. If you cannot decide, it is up to the landlord or the court to make a decision.

Tenancy agreements can provide additional succession rights, so it is important to check the agreement of the person who has passed away. If you are a local authority or housing association tenant, check whether the landlord has policies on when it will allow succession outside of the statutory rules.

Even if you have no legal right of succession, it is worth negotiating with the landlord if your circumstances are exceptional.

Note

Same-sex married couples are treated the same as opposite-sex married couples. Civil partners are treated the same as married couples. Same-sex partners not in a civil partnership but living together as if they were civil partners are treated the same as opposite-sex unmarried couples living together as husband and wife.

12.1 Joint tenants

If one of two joint tenants dies, the remaining tenant automatically takes over the whole tenancy. This is technically via 'survivorship' rather than succession, but the surviving tenant is treated as a successor. They are responsible for paying the rent in full.

If the tenancy is secure, assured, or assured shorthold, no further succession is permitted (unless the tenancy agreement states otherwise). If the tenancy is regulated under the Rent Act 1977, there is nothing to prevent further succession to the now-sole tenancy.

12.2 Private tenants

12.2.1 Assured (including assured shorthold tenancies)

Periodic assured tenancies (including assured shorthold tenancies) can be inherited by the tenant's spouse, civil partner, or a person who was living with the tenant as if they were their spouse or civil partner.

You must have been occupying the property as your only or principal home immediately before the tenant's death. Succession can only happen once.

As assured shorthold tenancies have limited security, it can be difficult for successors who were not previously joint tenants with the deceased tenant to assert succession rights. You could try to negotiate a new tenancy with your landlord rather than take over the existing tenancy by succession.

Note

It is common in the private sector for tenants to be granted assured shorthold tenancies with a six-month or one-year fixed term. If an assured shorthold tenancy granted by a private landlord is still within its fixed term, it should pass to the deceased tenants' personal representatives as part of their estate.

12.2.2 Regulated (protected and statutory) tenancies

Regulated tenancies can be inherited by the tenant's spouse, civil partner, or a person who was living with the tenant as if they were their spouse or civil partner. You must have been living in the property immediately before the tenant's death.

Alternatively, a tenancy can be taken over by a member of the tenant's family if they lived in the property for the two years leading up to the tenant's death. If a member of the family other than the tenant's spouse, civil partner or partner takes over the tenancy, it becomes assured instead of regulated. Otherwise, the successor inherits a statutory tenancy.

Regulated tenancies can be passed on twice, but only if the first succession is to a spouse, civil partner or co-habiting partner and the second is to a person who was related to both the original tenant and their successor. The second successor gets an assured tenancy.

12.3 Local authority tenants

12.3.1 All Welsh tenancies and English tenancies pre-1 April 2012

These tenancies can be inherited by a spouse, civil partner or a member of the tenant's family (including a partner the tenant lived with as if married or in a civil partnership).

A spouse or civil partner must have occupied the property as their only or principal home at the time of the tenant's death. A member of the family (including a partner) must have lived with the tenant for at least 12 months and occupied the property as their only or principal home at the time of death. If there is more than one potential successor, the spouse or civil partner has priority.

If you succeed to a tenancy after someone's death and are not the spouse or civil partner of the deceased tenant, the authority can ask the court for permission to move you to suitable alternative accommodation. They can only do this if the property is larger than you need and they gave you written notice between six and 12 months after the tenant's death. The court may only order possession if it is reasonable to do so.

A tenancy can only be passed on once in this way.

12.3.2 Tenancies in England that began on or after 1 April 2012

If a tenancy (a secure tenancy or a flexible tenancy) was granted after the above date, succession rights are more limited. The tenancy can only be inherited by a spouse, civil partner, or person living with the tenant as if they were their spouse or civil partner. However, the tenancy agreement may extend this right to other family members.

12.4 Housing association tenants

Assured tenancies granted by housing associations (including assured shorthold tenancies) can be inherited by the tenant's spouse, civil partner, or a person who was living with the tenant as if they were their spouse or civil partner. The successor must have occupied the property as their only or principal home immediately before the tenant's death and succession can only happen once.

For tenancies granted after 1 April 2012 in England, the Localism Act 2011 provides that the tenancy agreement may give additional succession rights, which apply if there is no-one eligible to succeed as a spouse, civil partner etc.

For secure housing association tenancies (granted before 15 January 1989), a family member (including a live-in partner) can succeed in the absence of an eligible spouse or civil partner. They must have lived in the property for at least 12 months before the tenant's death.

13 Harassment and illegal eviction

In most cases, it is illegal for your landlord to evict you without a court order. It is also against the law for your landlord to harass or withdraw services from you with the intention of forcing you to leave your home or making it impossible for you to live there in peace and comfort. Acts of harassment include threats or physical violence, withdrawing essential services such as disconnecting the electrical supply or refusing to carry out vital repairs.

The Protection from Eviction Act 1977 protects tenants whose landlords illegally try to force them to leave their accommodation.

The Protection from Harassment Act 1997 covers a wider range of harassment (racial harassment, neighbour disputes and harassment by landlords) and is not restricted to residential occupiers. It can be used in addition to, or instead of, the Protection from Eviction Act 1977.

If you are being harassed or threatened with illegal eviction, contact your local authority. Some have tenancy relations officers who deal with these cases. If the authority does not have a tenancy relations service, staff from other departments such as the Environmental Health or housing department may assist.

The authority normally tries to conciliate between you and your landlord. If this fails, it can take legal action against a landlord who breaks the law. Alternatively, you can take action yourself through the courts, but you should seek advice if you are considering this.

A court can set aside an eviction warrant if it is satisfied there has been an abuse of process or oppression in the execution of it. This includes where the landlord or the court gives 'misleading information' to you about the eviction and how you might act to stop it from occurring. If a warrant is set aside, your tenancy is automatically restored.

Useful organisations

The law relating to rights for tenants is complicated. This factsheet aims to give you basic information about your rights but in many cases you may want to get more detailed advice from a specialist adviser.

Citizens Advice

England or Wales go to www.citizensadvice.org.uk

In England telephone 0344 411 1444

In Wales telephone 0344 477 2020

Helps people resolve their money, legal and other problems by providing free, independent and confidential advice. Details of your local office can be found on the website.

Department for Communities and Local Government (DCLG)

www.gov.uk/government/organisations/department-for-communities-and-local-government

Telephone 0303 444 0000

The DCLG website has useful information on planning laws, tenants' rights and environmental protection relevant to England (in Wales, see Welsh Government entry below).

Homes and Communities Agency (HCA)

www.gov.uk/government/organisations/homes-and-communities-agency

Telephone 0300 1234 500

The HCA regulates registered providers of social housing in England, including local authority landlords and housing associations. It sets a number of standards that providers are expected to meet, but will only intervene in serious cases where harm has been caused or is likely (in Wales, see Welsh Government entry below).

Housing advice services

The availability and quality of housing advice varies from area to area. Local councils have a legal duty to ensure that advice and information about homelessness and how to prevent homelessness are available in their local area. Contact your local council as soon as possible if you are worried you may become homeless.

In some areas there may be a specific housing advice or housing aid centre, providing advice on a range of housing issues. Your local council or Citizens Advice should be able to tell you if there is a housing advice centre in your area.

Housing Ombudsman Service

www.housing-ombudsman.org.uk/

Telephone 0300 111 3000

Investigates complaints about landlords made by tenants in England. Social landlords registered with the social housing regulator, the HCA, must be members of the scheme. Membership is voluntary for private landlords and very few will be members.

Legal advice

Solicitors can advise you on the law and represent you in court if necessary. If you approach a solicitor about a housing matter, check that they are experienced in housing law. Your local housing advice centre or Citizens Advice may be able to refer you to an experienced solicitor. If you are on a low income you may be able to qualify for free legal advice.

For more information see factsheet 43, Getting legal advice.

Local Government Ombudsman (LGO)

www.lgo.org.uk

Telephone 0300 061 0614 or 0845 602 1983

In England, the LGO investigates complaints about injustice arising from poor administration by local authorities (in Wales, see entry for Public Services Ombudsman for Wales below).

Public Services Ombudsman for Wales

www.ombudsman-wales.org.uk

Telephone 0300 790 0203

The Ombudsman looks to see whether people have been treated unfairly or have received a bad service from a public body, such as a local authority.

Shelter

www.shelter.org.uk

Telephone 0808 800 4444 (free call)

A national charity providing telephone advice to people with housing problems on tenancy rights, homelessness, repairs and housing benefit.

Shelter Cymru

www.sheltercymru.org.uk

Telephone 0345 075 5005

Stonewall

www.stonewall.org.uk

Telephone 08000 50 20 20

A voluntary organisation that campaigns on legal equality and social justice for the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender community.

Stonewall Cymru

www.stonewallcymru.org.uk

Telephone 029 2023 7744

Tai Pawb

www.taipawb.org

Telephone 029 2053 7630

An organisation in Wales that promotes equality and social justice in housing. They are committed to working in partnership with the providers and receivers of housing services, local authority partners, third sector (voluntary organisations) and the Welsh Government.

Welsh Government

www.wales.gov.uk

Telephone 0300 0604400

The devolved government for Wales.

Your local council

If you are not a local authority tenant and are having problems with your landlord, the authority may have a tenancy relations officer who can help you. Whoever your landlord is, the authority must ensure that advice and information about homelessness and the prevention of homelessness is available to you free of charge. They may have a duty to help you if you become homeless or are threatened with homelessness.

Age UK

Age UK provides advice and information for people in later life through our Age UK Advice line, publications and online. Call Age UK Advice to find out whether there is a local Age UK near you, and to order free copies of our information guides and factsheets.

Age UK Advice

www.ageuk.org.uk

0800 169 65 65

Lines are open seven days a week from 8.00am to 7.00pm

In Wales contact

Age Cymru

www.agecymru.org.uk

0800 022 3444

In Northern Ireland contact

Age NI

www.ageni.org

0808 808 7575

In Scotland contact

Age Scotland

www.agescotland.org.uk

0800 124 4222

Support our work

We rely on donations from our supporters to provide our guides and factsheets for free. If you would like to help us continue to provide vital services, support, information and advice, please make a donation today by visiting www.ageuk.org.uk/donate or by calling 0800 169 87 87.

Our publications are available in large print and audio formats

Next update June 2018

The evidence sources used to create this factsheet are available on request. Contact resources@ageuk.org.uk

This factsheet has been prepared by Age UK and contains general advice only, which we hope will be of use to you. Nothing in this factsheet should be construed as the giving of specific advice and it should not be relied on as a basis for any decision or action. Neither Age UK nor any of its subsidiary companies or charities accepts any liability arising from its use. We aim to ensure that the information is as up to date and accurate as possible, but please be warned that certain areas are subject to change from time to time. Please note that the inclusion of named agencies, websites, companies, products, services or publications in this factsheet does not constitute a recommendation or endorsement by Age UK or any of its subsidiary companies or charities.

Every effort has been made to ensure that the information contained in this factsheet is correct. However, things do change, so it is always a good idea to seek expert advice on your personal situation.

Age UK is a charitable company limited by guarantee and registered in England and Wales (registered charity number 1128267 and registered company number 6825798). The registered address is Tavis House, 1–6 Tavistock Square, London WC1H 9NA. Age UK and its subsidiary companies and charities form the Age UK Group, dedicated to improving later life.